

Kyle has been struggling to find parking at UofSC every semester. Any time he actually ends up finding a spot it's in a lot that so far away from campus it takes forever to walk to his class.

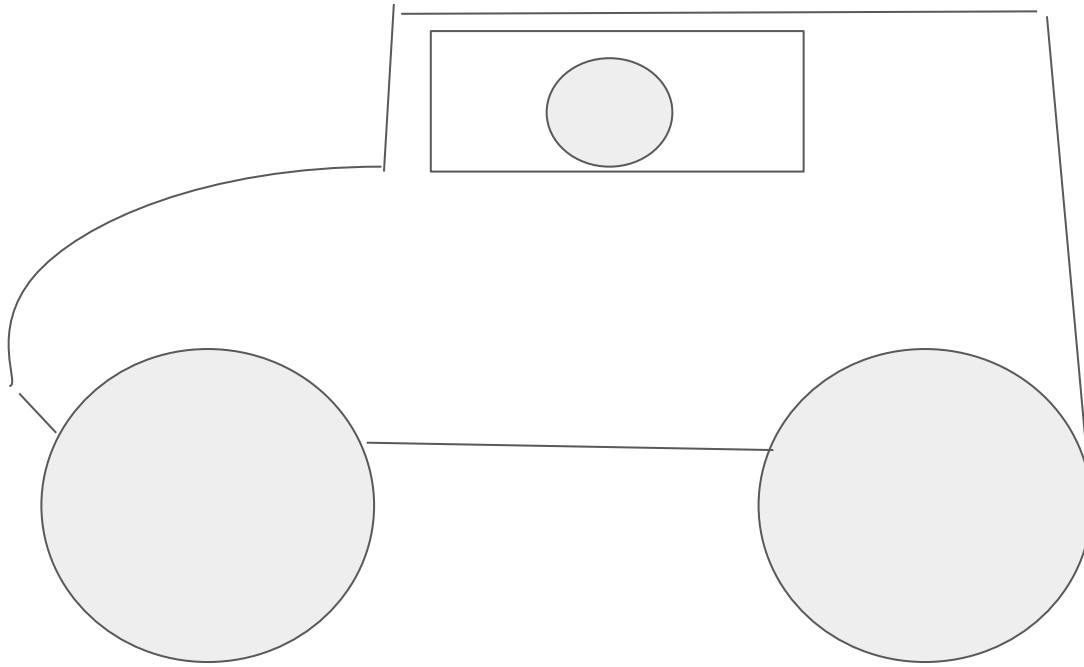

Kyle had heard about a new app going around campus called College Cars.

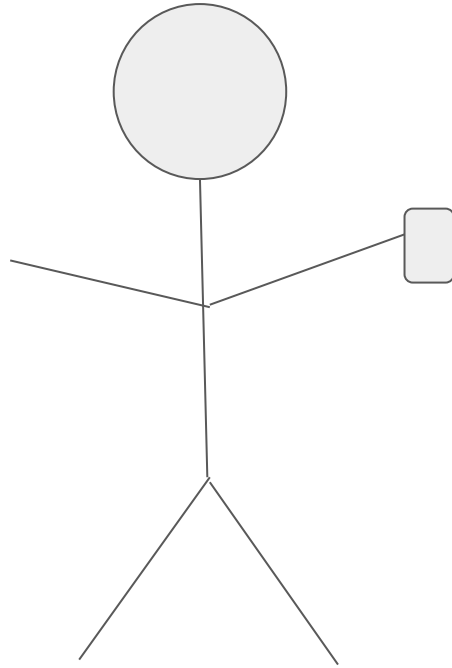

He checks one of the lots that's usually full and decides to see how accurate the app is

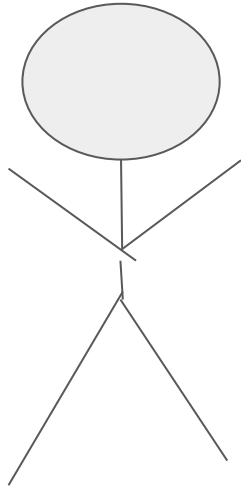

Kyle checks the spot on the way there to let people on the app know that he is heading to take that spot

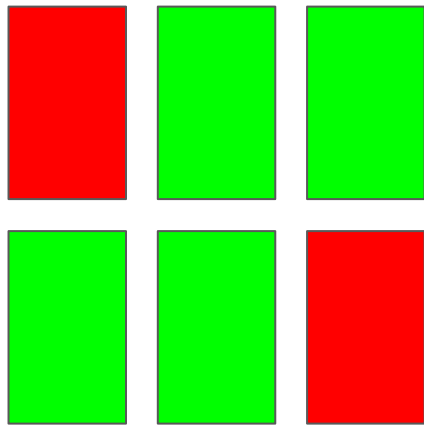

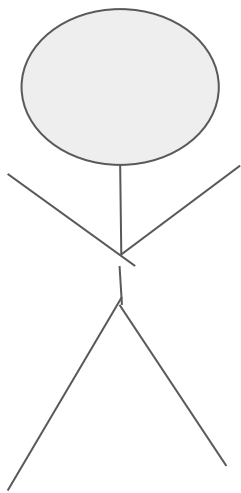

Kyle arrives at the spot and sees that it's open. The app reminds him that after 4 hours it will notify him that his spot will expire in the app soon in order to see if he wants the spot still.

Kyle goes to his class happy that he doesn't have to walk a mile today

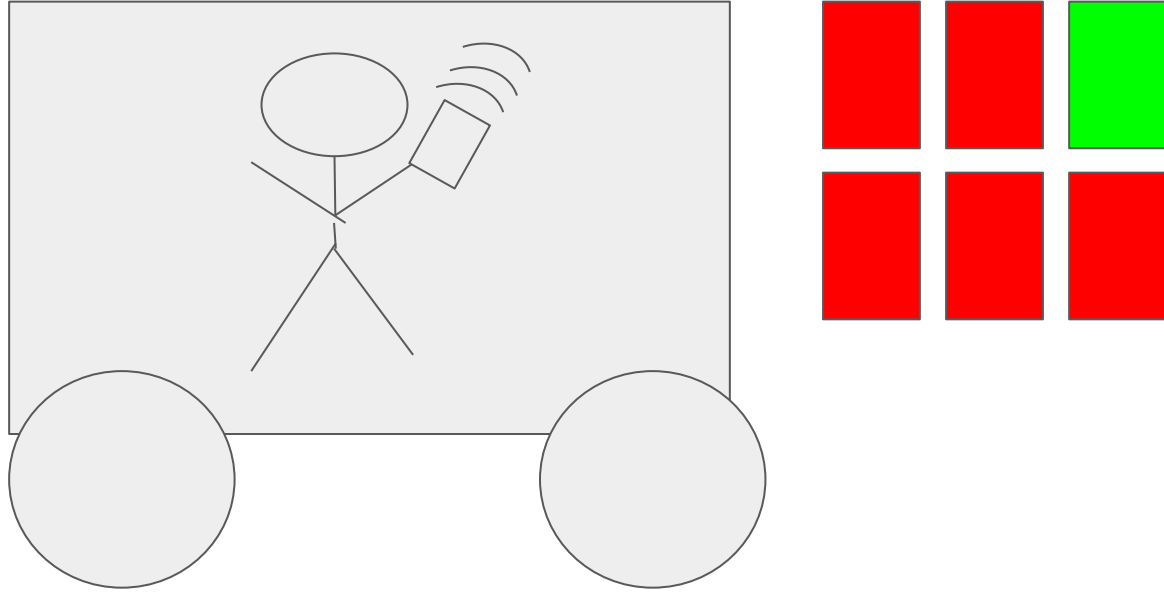

Will smithed needs to get to his class quick and is unsure if the parking lot he usually goes to has available spots

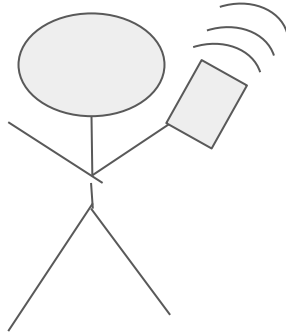

Will checks the app for available parking spots and is delighted that the lot has plenty left.

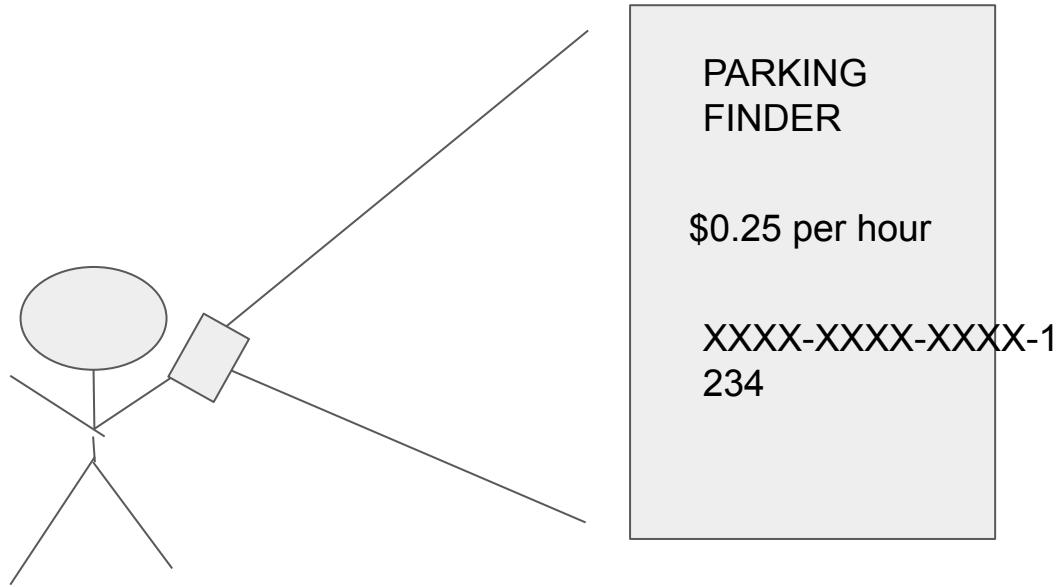

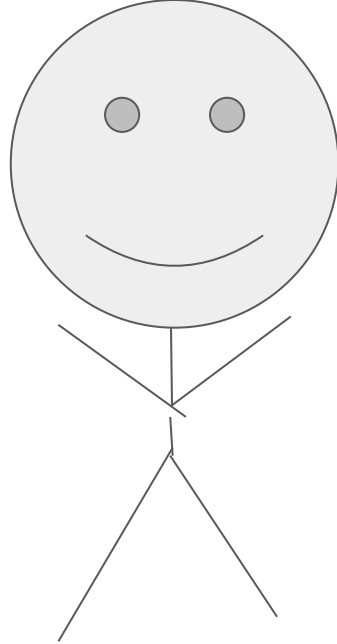

Will puts in his destination and begins heading towards the parking lot. Halfway through his trip he receives a notification saying the lot is filling up and the app lets him know that he can reserve a spot.

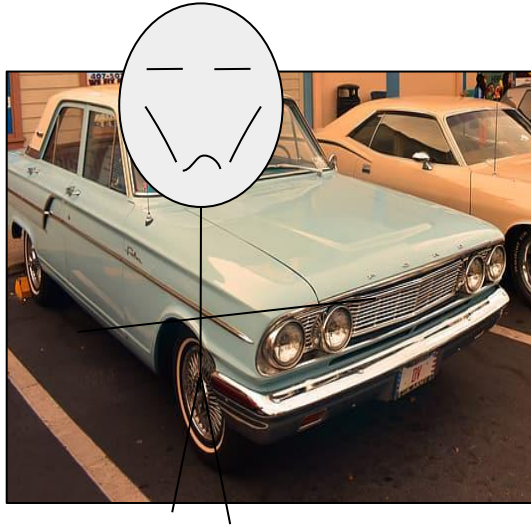

Will reserves his spot and continues driving stress-free knowing that his spot will be there when he arrives

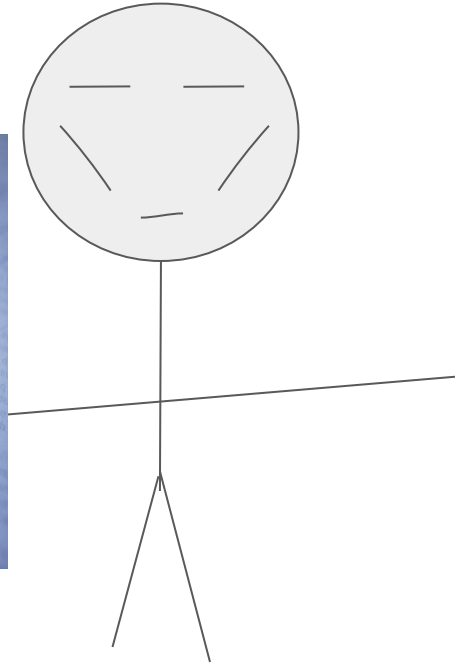

As will is pulling into his spot he signs in on the app to begin his session. Since will put his credit card on the app there is no risk of towing or forgetting to pay.

Will is now heading home happy that he could make it to his classes on time.

Christopher Williams is struggling to find a park in the morning before class starts and has lately been behind schedule.

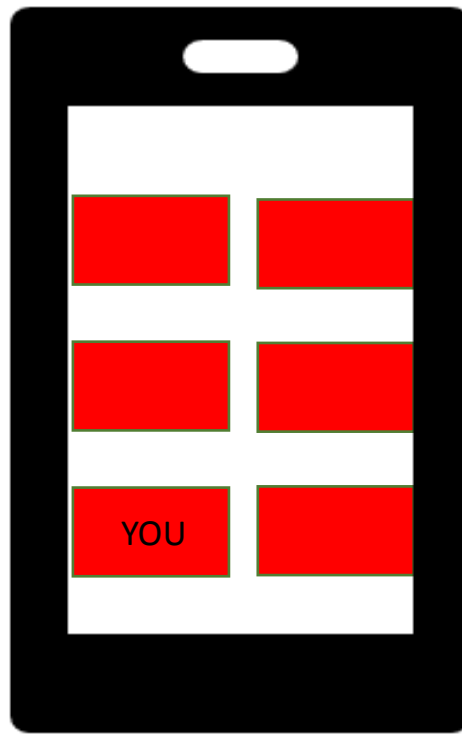

Christopher decides to give the newly released Parking Searcher app to find a park.

Since the app allows users to reserve spots in advance, Christopher can get a space before his long ride to the University.

Now when Christopher arrives, his spot is still reserved and he can park in the spot.

On arrival, Christopher successfully parks and arrives on time for class.

Christopher is a very satisfied and happy user of the Parking Searcher app, and will recommend it to students and friends now.
